

Health Law, Bioethics & Human Rights
JD 954 & LW 840
Spring 2006

Boston University School of Law
Room 1470A
Thursdays, 8:30-10:30 am

Professor George J. Annas

Course Description: Health law, bioethics, and human rights are converging in challenging ways, especially at the national level (in both legislation and constitutional adjudication), and the international law level. This seminar will explore the convergence and its meaning for the law and society through specific case studies including post-9/11 proposals for mass quarantine; torture justifications in the GWOT; genetic engineering and the new reproductive technologies; the relationship between abortion and the death penalty; and the meaning of the “right to health.”

Prerequisite: Health law or permission of the instructor.

Course requirements: (see p. 4)

Required Texts:

King, PA, Areen, J & Gostin L, eds. Law, Medicine & Ethics, Foundation Press, NY, 2006 [LME]

Course Requirements

This is a research seminar designed to help you understand the interrelationships among (health) law, (bio)ethics, and human rights. In addition to participation in weekly discussions, there are two course requirements, one oral and one written. The first involves a brief oral report on a specific aspect of the topic under discussion that week. Beginning on February 2, 2 or 3 students a week will be assigned topics to present or argue the following week. More details on format will be discussed in class.

The written assignment is to prepare a paper in the form of a “recommendation report” on a specific legal change you propose that is aimed at resolving or helping to resolve a problem that has overlapping or interrelated legal, ethical and human rights dimensions. Specific aspects of topics addressed in class are perfectly appropriate. The paper must recommend a specific legal change (regulatory, legislative, or judicial) designed to enhance the public’s health or enhance the public’s protection, together with a complete justification for this proposal, an explanation as to how it can be implemented in the real world, an evaluation process, and the major arguments for and against it. The relevant population could be city, state, national or international. With prior permission, the paper can be formatted as a brief to the U.S. Supreme Court on a hypothetical case, or even as a Supreme Court or International Criminal Court opinion regarding a hypothetical case.

Recommendation topics must be approved. A description of the problem you have identified is due on February 16, 2006. Problems identified will be discussed in class. A tentative solution to your problem is due on March 16. You are encouraged, but not required to submit a draft of your paper. The deadline to submit a draft is March 30. Final papers are due by noon on April 20, and can be hand delivered or mailed to my office (Department of Health Law, Bioethics & Human Rights, 715 Albany St., Boston, MA 02118). E-mailed papers are not acceptable.

The maximum length of the paper is 20 double-spaced 12 point type pages, not including references, footnotes or appendices. References must be either in Blue Book form or New England Journal of Medicine form. Late reports will not be accepted without prior written permission. Your final grade will be based 75 percent on the written recommendation report itself, and 25 percent on class participation, including your oral presentation.

Note: Students wishing to write a cert paper for this course must obtain permission to do this on or before January 26 and will be subject to a different timetable and length requirement.

Class attendance is required.
