Course Description:

Since the end of the Second World War we observe the consolidation of a Human Rights Regime that manifests itself along three central dimensions: through the formation of nation-transcending legislation (e.g. International Tribunals and the institutionalization of supra-national Courts); a politics of restitution that seeks to compensate former victims; and the institution of truth and reconciliation commissions. The latter modes of coming to terms with difficult national pasts, are particularly salient to states facing transitional conditions, but can also be found in the context of established democracies.

Based on those developments, this is a course for advanced graduate students with an interest in: the sociological significance of Human Rights norms and their various effects on international and domestic politics. The aforementioned proliferation of Human Rights Regimes and their institutionalization will serve as an analytic prism to explore their relative impact on: Migration patterns, War Crime Tribunals, Genocide prevention and the monitoring of Ethnic Cleansing and other aspects of restitution politics. We will also analyze how these developments relate to the potential reconfiguration of state-society relations, and the role both non-state actors (such as NGOs, INGOs, TSMs) as well as supranational organizations play in this emerging constellation.

Course Requirements:

In addition to your active participation, you are expected to write short analytic reaction papers on the reading materials. Your final project will take the form of a research paper on a Human Rights subject of your choice. Your final grade is composed of 15% for the reaction papers, 15% for participation and 70% for the final paper.
